EDWIN J. POLLOCK

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 1.—The Bengal tiger awakens from its winter and summer idleness today and will bare its teeth, rear on its hind legs and cuff the ears of Little Quakers when Princeton engages Swarthmore in the opening battle of the 1921 football season at Palmer Stadium. The first whistle sounds at 3 p. m.

A trifle muscle-bound, cramped and brain-fogged from its long sleep, the Tiger has not yet reached the rousing power that squirmed feet last year, but the lust of the fight today is expected to fire the snarl of the jungle beast in spite of the fact that it is last but not by means least, in the prestige of the 1920 triumphs of 1920, its swift backs and sturdy linemen, rules the favorite over Swarthmore by quite a margin.

The Orange and Black holds a twenty-pound advantage over the Little Quakers, and this alone is almost enough to swing the dope; but in addition, the Tigers have five more points to their credit, last but not by means least, in the prestige of the New Jersey institution, which usually imbues rivals with stage fright or a subconscious idea that defeat cannot be averted.

Tigers Big Favorites

The red dog often has been slapped severely in the face and on other parts of its anatomy, but a one-sided victory for the Tigers seems assured if the Grand Old Man runs according to form.

There is only one feature that may prove a thorn in the side of the 1920 champions. There is a fear of over-confidence, and Coach Bill Rupp has been trying to drive this out of the heads of his pupils since practice started some three weeks ago. Overconfidence is a disease that will steal the strength of a giant.

Swarthmore has a good aggregation, in a team that must be taken seriously. Coach Roy Mercer knows that the Red team boys will be the leaders of their forces, but with the Garnet and Blue, traditional opponents of the Red and Blue, there is the feeling that something might be done.

Youngsters on Hand

Twelve hundred youngsters, members of various boys' clubs throughout the city, will be on their way to Franklin Field shortly before game time. They are the ghosts of the Rotar Club, of this city. Several bands they brought along will liven up the wait for the kick-off.

For nearly all of the youngsters, it will be their first big game. Like true Americans, the youngsters know the different positions, and those who are ignorant of the great American game will soon be apprised of the significance of center, halfback and tackles by their brother youngsters.

Penn was the favorite for the game, and the Red and Blue were the big favorites. Last week Franklin and Marshall defeated Albright 7 to 6, and showed that they had lots of speed and agility. Yesterday afternoon was an easy one for the Red and Blue.

Fitzgerald, left tackle; and Bill Wright, left halfback, will switch a little, and Vogelin, going to right halfback, and Vogel will switch to right end. Wright will call the signals and Pass Miller will look after the left halfback post. White, McAnally, Langdon and several other substitute backs are almost certain to see action, according to the score of the game progresses.

Hannan is anxious to test out his substitutes, and in all probability a large crowd will be crushed into the game in the last periods. Last week, except for the fourth period, the scrubs showed little. All week in scrimage drills they have been getting their opportunity to show.

Vision Have Good Defense

According to his account, he viewed Franklin and Marshall, they have developed an exceptional defensive scheme so early in the season. During the last week, according to reports from Lancaster, the F. and M. collegians have been devoting a large amount of their time in drilling in the offensive end of the field.

A jump shift, which is said to be fashioned after the Dartmouth shift, was used with much success during the game. Coach Whitley Price expects his charges to give Penn a real battle.

Most of the visitors are veterans and know the game thoroughly. The squad numbers twenty-seven, an unusually large one for a small college.

Origan, the star halfback of Penn, who resides in Camden when the visiting college suffered injuries on the field, was expected to keep him out of the line-up. This morning, however, he reported that he was ready to take his place behind the line. While the big man received a fractured nose during the week, he will watch this afternoon's game from the sidelines. Franck, the former North High School boy, will take his place in the line.
